

Accumulator Contracts:

This type of contract allows producers to have bushels priced weekly above the current market, if certain conditions are met.

How does it work?

Grower agrees to deliver a specific quantity and quality of grain for a determined delivery period. The contract sets an accumulation price above current market levels and prices weekly at that level as long as certain market conditions are met. Contract includes an Accumulation price, a Knock-out level, and the pricing period. The Accumulation futures level will be above the current market, the knock out level will be below the current market, and the pricing period will be a set amount of weeks
